

June 12, 2013

Port of Baltimore Weather Advisory

Please be advised severe weather is predicted for the Mid-Atlantic region Thursday, June 13, 2013. Please take necessary precautions when traveling to and from the Port of Baltimore. The below message from the State Highway Administration pertains to permitted loads traveling through Maryland during this period of expected weather.

The weather forecast for Maryland on Thursday, June 13, 2013 calls for severe storms with a potential “Derecho” effect forming. This weather may render movement of permit loads unsafe in some areas of the state. Please exercise caution, good judgment and restraint when considering moves tomorrow. The Hauling Permit Unit will extend any permit that may expire due to waiting out the storm (gratis) and will assist in coordinating with law enforcement escorts (if applicable) to resume the move as soon as possible. Should conditions warrant, permit moves may be cancelled statewide until the threat has passed. This notice will be posted on our Hauling Permit Restrictions web page <http://www.roads.maryland.gov> which is required to be checked prior to any move, if a complete shutdown is ordered. Wind restrictions may also be posted on Maryland Transportation Authority bridges as well. Again, check our web page for the latest information.